Excerpt from Peace With Justice: Selected Addresses These speeches are the record of the man who led his people - and much of the world - during this fateful decade. Though they were given to many diverse groups, they deal with variations on a single theme: Peace. With a devotion to peace, born out of long experience with war and a passionate conviction of the need for its abandonment, the President sought again and again to point out the requisites for peace and the means by which they could be achieved. The aggregate impact of these addresses is impressive particularly because the President endeavored constantly to detach essential principles and problems from the context of special circumstance and to subject them to thoughtful analysis. Much stress is laid upon the fundamental need for responsible citizenship and a strong sense of civic obligation on the part of all our people. Whatever America hopes to bring to pass in the world must first come to pass in the heart of America. This sentence from the First Inaugural, repeated in later addresses, clearly...
