Language: English Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Plant World, Vol. 8 Can Nature Guide Horticulture? The amount of truth in the statement that horticulture as an empirical art can obtain but little guidance from botany and a knowledge of the conditions under which plants occur in nature, depends upon the deour ignorance of the influence of environmental factors and of the relationships of plants to them, and of our grasp of physiological as distinct from physical effects. With increase of knowledge the validity of the statement must decrease. In no direction has research in recent years provided more valuable data of significance to horticulture than in that of the water-relations of plants the conception of physiological drought is Ear reaching. Soils and Physiological Drought. Our knowledge of the mechanical and chemical States of Soils, of their varying retentivene-- of water, and of the effect upon this of aeration and temperature, tells us thai -oils, anatomically and constitutionally different, may be physiologically alike in respect of the watei relationships of plant-. It sounds paradoxical to say that a soaking peat soil is...
