Excerpt: . . . that they thrive well along the entire of the northern coast, from Belfast to the Causeway. The Cavehill, however, a mountain, which, at a distance of about three miles from town, rises to the height of 1100 feet, holds out, on its heathery and uncultivated sides, richer attractions: -- And oft, with bolder wing, they soaring dare The purple heath, or where the wild thyme grows, And yellow load them with the luscious spoil. Thomson Spring. A glass bell, placed upon the top of the bee-box, or glass hive, for I know not which is the more proper term, is soon filled with honey. The comb is remarkable for its whiteness and transparency, and the honey seems to be of the finest and purest kind. Mr. Jacksons father has several glass hives of a similar construction, at Waterford; and has, on different occasions, obtained two shillings and sixpence a pound for a glass bell and its contained honey. One bell produced, at this price, three pounds seventeen shillings and six pence; and two others about three pounds thirteen shillings each, having been purchased by a druggist in Bristol, as a substitute for the celebrated honey of Narbonne. WILD BEES IN AMERICA. 131 It is curious how places have become famed for one production, and continue to be so, while the generations of man pass away; nay, while the very laws and institutions of the country have been overthrown. A feeble plant may thus, in...
