But we must hurry home now to our work. We shall see later just how thoughts affect these graves and all things on earth, when we look into the Rose of Thoughts. VI--A CHANGE BEAUTIFUL Sunday morning it was. that memorable third day of the month of May, when two little travelers dressed in mourning, accompanied by a lady, boarded the train. Neither of them had ever enjoyed such a luxury before, and they watched with great interest the country as it flew by. By and by the little fellow, tired of the continual rattling, fell asleep, while the girl took out of the tiny bundle beside her a school book in which she became intensely interested. From time to time she asked her lady companion questions. Where are we going? She received only the vague answer, home. Will we find Mama there? I don t know. Will I go to school tomorrow and join my new class, for tomorrow is promotion day? I hope so. Then to herself, Gypsie, who was one of the little travelers reviewed all that she had learned so that she might be able to pass tomorrow s examination. At last the train stopped. Johnny rubbed his sleepy eyes while his energetic sister put his cap on. The lady took their tiny bundle and Gypsie her beloved school book, then they stepped to the platform. The lady looked anxiously around for somebody. Presently an elderly...
