In the latter part of the Summer of 1883, the Institution experienced a severe bereavement in the death of two of its Professors. Rev. William H. Hornblower, D.D., who occupied the Chair of Sacred Rhetoric, Pastoral Theology and Church Government, died, July 16th. While he was a man of extensive and varied learning, he was uniformly courteous in all relations of life. He was stricken with paralysis at the close of a Sabbath morning service, which he had been conducting in one of the churches of Pittsburgh. Rev. Samuel J. Wilson, D.D., LL.D., was a graduate of the Institution. Having been retained in it as an instructor, in a short time he was elected a Professor, in which position he had been honored with the highest testimonies of the Church s...
