I have already asked, perhaps, if you wish for Biirghers poems. The ballad of Lenor has undergone three different translations: the last of which, by the honorable Mr. Spencer, is a most pompous folio, with several beautiful engravings, and the German text on the opposite page: --price one guinea. The laureats production is eighteen pence. Have you yet seen the new Parochial history of Stockton---in which, by the by, you have got a snug niche; though, I doubt, whether you will think yourself much indebted for it either to the author or to his informant. . . Health and friendship! J. Rx-rson. CLIV. To THE Enrror. If you can find no better employment for the old womans two guineas than the foolish device and pitiful conceit you have so elaborately described, you would do well, I think, to...
