The giant strides since made by America, her fabulous production of wealth, rise in manufacture and agriculture that practically place her at the head of all other nations in this respect, in short, the stupendous stage of capitalist development that the country has reached, would seem to remove the contrast. It does not. These changes are not enough to draw conclusions as to the stage of Socialism that may be expected. The above passages from Marx explain why, and they indicate what other factors need consideration before a bourgeois republic has left behind its conservative form of existence and entered upon that political revolutionary stage of its life, without which a Socialist Movement can not be expected to gain its steerable way. These factors - the permanent character and, therefore, intellectual consciousness of the classes, due to the traditions of old having been dissolved through the work of centuries;...
