Copper Canyon Press, Australia, 2004. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Marvin Bell, one of America's most influential, visible, and inventive poets, likes ideas to have a little dirt on their shoes. His wildly original and often gritty curiosity finds inspiration in wide-ranging locales, and even wider topics. He will take on any subject in his poetry, and the conclusion of Rampant is a ten-part suite, Journal of the Posthumous Present, which was commissioned by the Getty Research Institute and published as a cover feature in American Poetry Review. The poem is remarkable for its original methods and socio-philosophic investigation, and points to the signature of Bell's career: his ability to radically examine the world through poetry. From The Bones Repeat Themselves from the Bottom Upward Later there will be a wedding in the leaves by the white church where the Boy Scouts box in the basement, trying to be brave. The owner of the fishing station watches the sea through binoculars, fixing on the darker water where the boats clustered to thin a school. The days have been growing raw, and he is willing to give the last ones five minutes before he rips the tide apart with an inboard and drags to the beach those who didn't see the end coming. Marvin Bell enlarges our understanding of what poetry can do. --Georgia Review Bell's passion [is] for exploring the traces of paradox in language, culture and nature. --Virginia Quarterly Review Marvin Bell's writing has been part of the conversation for 40 years. One of the country's most visible poets, he is Iowa's first and current Poet Laureate, a long-time teacher at the Iowa Writers Workshop, and has toured with the author-based band Rock Bottom Remainders. He also reads...
