Our algorithms are obtained by implementing Dijkstra's algorithm using a new data structure which we call a redistributive heap The one-level redistributive heap consists of $O(\log C)$ buckets, each with an associated range of integer numbers Each bucket stores nodes whose temporary distance labels lie in its range Further, the ranges are dynamically changed during the execution, which leads to a redistribution of nodes to buckets. The resulting algorithm runs in $O(m \log C)$ time. Using a two-level redistributive heap, we improve the complexity of this algorithm to $O(m + n \log C / \log \log nC)$. Finally, we use a modified version of Fibonacci heaps to reduce the complexity of our algorithm to $O(m + n \log C)$. This algorithm, under the assumption that...
