Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Notes of Four Lectures on the Literature and Philosophy of the Middle Ages, Vol. 1 You are aware that I have undertaken on this occasion to give a brief series of illustrations of the history of the Literature of the Middle Ages. I am glad that my Lectures have been preceded by those of Dr. Kinkel on Mediaeval Art, and those of Dr. Brewer on the Norman Conquest; for, although the period comprised in Dr. Brewer's Lecture is comparatively a very limited one, we shall find in this portion of our own history characteristics exhibiting in miniature a process which ultimately extended itself over the whole of North-Western Europe. And art is, in truth, the grand characteristic feature of the Mediaeval period. The characteristics of the old Roman civilisation are very varied. We read of the armies of Rome, of its poetry, its history, its palaces, its jurisprudence. Of the Gothic period its art is almost all we know. The Norman castle, the Gothic cathedral, rise up before us as almost the only images associated with this time in our minds, - as that which alone gives any distinctness to our conceptions of a form of life so wonderfully different from that in which we exist.
