These latter methods, starting with the matrices of correlation coefficients as a base, have attempted to organize the tests between which the correlations are obtained in terms of the sums of independent mathematical variables. However, no matter whether we treat the correlations themselves or the patterns derived from them as fundamental in our analysis of the relations between and among test variables, we find that in either case a particular test variable is treated as a unit. The correlation coefficient cannot indicate whether the items which make up the test variables in question contribute equally or unequally to the degree of concomitant variation of which the coefficient is a measure. It cannot tell us whether there exist opposed relational tendencies within different aspects of the variables themselves which, though they possibly measure heterogeneous functions must nevertheless be treated by the technique of correlation as homogeneous units. In the analysis by factors, there is an attempt to break up the seemingly rough measure of variance that the correlation coefficient implies into several uncorrelated components. This, however, hardly amounts to saying more than that while we have measured the relative mathematical dependence of two variables on each other by one correlation coefficient, we may now consider this relationship as expressed by the sum of several correlation coefficients which add up to the original one. In the latter method,...
