Excerpt: .feet was soon after distinctly audible. I turned and looked. The Fifth Regiment was marching down the middle of North Eutaw Street, having not yet crossed Baltimore Street, the drum corps in front, the colors flying, and crowding the sidewalks on either hand was a motley van and bodyguard, consisting of street loafers and half-grown boys, who hatf come along to see the fun, and whose sympathies were plainly with the rioters. The foremost of these soon reached the spot where I stood, and as I drew aside to let them pass, I heard a. gamin say to his neighbor: I say, Bill, these yere putty little soldier-boys hadn t better make ther las will an testament--. ain t it? I dunno bout that, replied the other, 3 veteran of fourteen, who was chewing tobacco, and whom I recognized as a certain one-eyed newsboy....
