

Kids and Credibility: An Empirical Examination of Youth, Digital Media Use, and Information Credibility

By Andrew J Flanagin, Miriam J Metzger

MIT Press Ltd, United States, 2010. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 198 x 135 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. How well do children navigate the ocean of information that is available online? The enormous variety of Web-based resources represents both opportunities and challenges for Internet-savvy kids, offering extraordinary potential for learning and social connection but little guidance on assessing the reliability of online information. This book reports on the first large-scale survey to examine children's online information-seeking strategies and their beliefs about the credibility of that information. This Web-based survey of 2,747 children, ages 11 to 18 (and their parents), confirms children's heavy reliance on the Internet. They are concerned about the credibility of online information, but 89 percent believe that some to a lot of it is believable; and, choosing among several options, they rate the Internet as the most believable information source for entertainment, commercial products, and schoolwork (more credible than books for papers or projects). Most have more faith information found on Wikipedia more than they say others should; and they consider an article on the Web site of Encyclopedia Britannica more believable than the identical article found on Wikipedia. Other findings show that...

READ ONLINE
[3.27 MB]

Reviews

It is really an awesome pdf that I actually have actually study. It really is basic but excitement from the 50 % of the publication. I am delighted to inform you that here is the greatest book i have read through within my individual existence and can be he finest publication for actually.

-- Mrs. Yasmine Crona

Very good eBook and valuable one. This is for anyone who statte that there was not a worth reading. You will not truly feel monotony at at any time of your own time (that's what catalogs are for concerning if you question me).

-- Ms. Ona Muller