This poem is attributed in the Complete Angler to a Jo. Davers, Esq. It has also been attributed to Donne and Davies. The Secrets of Angling, by J. D., was first published in 1613, and since then has become one of the rarest books in the whole of angling literature, where rare books are somewhat common. Many other passages in the poem are excellent beside the one quoted, notably a delightful account, in the third book, of the qualities which a good angler should possess. In the Stationers Registers, the author s name is given as John Dennys. VIII. IX. X. The work of a charming and little - known poet. His Britannia s Pastorals give a wonderful picture of old English country life and its pleasures--maypole - dancing, angling, hunting, and love-making. His works have recently been published in the Muses Library (Lawrence Bullen). xx. Dr Johnson has a Latin rendering of the last stanza of this song, which is one of the most famous in the literature of the sport-- Nunc, per gramina fusi, Densa fronde salicti, Dum defenditur imber, Molles ducimus boras, etc. XXXII. The writings of the once famous Peter Pindar, though now little read, are often full of real humour and surprising skill in epigram. The poem quoted is from the New-Old Ballads, a collection of verses in ridicule of old-fashioned poetry. xxxiv. This sonnet is interesting, since nowadays one often hears it said that Wordsworth...
