Createspace, United States, 2011. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 203 x 133 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In April of 2010 (National Poetry Month), we took part in the annual Poem-a-Day Challenge, writing during breaks at work, during lunch hours, on long subway rides, in parks in the rain or sun, in front of the 11pm news (or the 4am news), while avoiding conversations in the Laundromat, instead of doing our taxes (or because we d just done our taxes), and so on. April soon became May became another summer and then fall and winter and finally on into another April. In 2011, we agreed to select roughly 25 poems each and put them into this book-length collection. Out of literally hundreds of poems, we have distilled this collection down to these few (many?) pages. The only rules: the poem must have been written between the two Aprils (2010 and 2011) and no editing allowed (except obvious typos). The idea is not so much to show that we are great poets (there are already enough people out there claiming that) but instead to simply show friends, family and fellow writers something we did over this past year. Themes in these poems are broad in range and yet, often repeat over the course of a month or months: Mexico, the ocean, rivers, loss, grief love, sex, food, traffic, bridges, food, rain, injustice, food, sleep, nightmares, sex, food, Mexico, the ocean - you get the idea. Like lovers or meals or rivers, some poems are better than others. Some are only a few lines, some cover pages. What is important here is not that this is great art but instead that we set out to write a poem every day. And we did. We have. We still...
