O, yes, father; and were not the tiny fountains like the praises of redeemed child en, little ones like Edward and 1? The sira smiled, with tears in his eyes, saying, God bless you, my child; and may you indeed be allowed to join that song of joy. That evening, when the family assembled for worship, the sira repeated many passages from the Holy Scriptures, which spoke of the power of the great Creator, who alone was able to restrain these hidden fires, and to preserve his people in safety through the helplessness of sleep. They took leave of their friends on the morning of the fifth day, for the sira wished to be. at home early on Saturday afternoon. This they were enabled to do, without accident or delay, to the great joy of Madam Meeta. Like most children after a first absence, Edward and Miriam were surprised that every thing should have gone on as regularly as when they were at home; and the latter thought her goats and her little lamb hardly sa glad to see her as she expected them to be. But the pleasure of being indeed at home again, surrounded by familiar objects, and, more than all, having the time filled up by familiar duties, made amends for ftvery disappointment. CHAPTER XII. This was...
