Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Savings in Electric Cooling Energy by the Use of a Whole-House Fan While an attic fan is usually installed at the gable and draws the outdoor air through gable and soffit ventilation openings, the attic whole-house fan is mounted at the ceiling, and draws outside air through windows and exhausts it through the attic space. The fan would be turned on whenever the outdoor temperature is low enough to provide natural cooling. Since an average whole-house fan would require 400 to 500 watts of electrical energy as contrasted to the 2500 to 3000 required for central air conditioning, it is easy to see that significant electrical energy savings are possible by substituting the use of a whole-house fan for a central air conditioner. Most of the whole-house fans are designed to ventilate a house at to 1 air change per minute. If the house temperature is to be maintained at a reasonably comfortable condition, the use of a whole-house fan could be substituted for that of an air conditioner whenever the outdoor temperature is less than about 82f About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
