SACRUM AND PELVIS. The preservation of the sacrum and pelvis of the type of P. ingens Marsh, No. 1175, is remarkable, displaying to advantage the principal characters of these important skeletal parts. Plate X exhibits the slightly distorted form of this specimen, while restored diagrams have also been prepared to show the side, top, and bottom views, respectively (Plate XI, figures 1, 2, and 3). Ten vertebrae firmly ankylosed together constitute the sacral series, using this term in its broader sense--the synsacrum of Professor T. J. Parker. The entire length of the inflexible column so formed is 184 mm. The extremities of the neural spines of all these vertebrae are united by a continuous median longitudinal band about 9 mm wide and about 6 mm in vertical depth. In general form, the three anterior members of this series are similar to the free dorsals which precede them. Their transverse processes arise from the sides of the neural arch above the level of the centra and are fused distally with the anterior blades of the ilia. The first of these vertebrae bears anterior zygapophyses for articulation with the last free dorsal, and the transverse processes of these three anterior vertebrae have on their lower surfaces small facets for the support of ribs, as is frequently the condition in the avian sacrum. These facets are most distally situated on the transverse processes of the first vertebra, least so on those of the...
