

International Trade Increases Demand for Farm Products (Classic Reprint) (Paperback)

By United States Department of Agriculture

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from International Trade Increases Demand for Farm Products Except during times of war, the United States has difficulty in maintaining markets here at home for as much as we are capable of producing. During the reasonably full employment of the decade of the 1920s, foreign loans and industrial and agricultural exports paid for in part by those loans helped maintain domestic employment here. Something of the same sort may happen in the first decade after this war. Last time, after the foreign loans stopped, international trade slumped. -undoubtedly this contributed to the world depression which followed. This time we face the challenge: As export trade supported by loans begins to decline, can we find other ways to maintain markets? To do that, we must maintain and increase our own domestic consumption, both of the things we make here and of the things-we buy from other countries, to such an extent that the farmers and workers of this and other countries can continue producing and consuming up to their full capabilities. Large exports supported by foreign loans can help support...
