Shaker Verlag Feb 2014, 2014. Buch. Book Condition: Neu. 210x148x mm. Neuware - 'Europe needs to foster entrepreneurial drive more effectively' postulates the European Commission in its 'Green Paper' (COM, 2003, p. 4). Indeed, in recent years, many industrialized economies have implemented policies trying to encourage entrepreneurial activity. Public support of new venture creation and transition into self-employment may persist as entrepreneurship is considered as the key to economic growth and the entrepreneur as the outstanding actor in a modern economy (Acs & Audretsch, 2005). Although it has become a key issue in academic research, the determinants of entrepreneurship are not fully understood. The focus of entrepreneurship research has shifted away from the role of individuals to the role of environmental conditions affecting firm formation (Thornton & Flynn, 2003) and to the characteristics of entrepreneurial opportunities (Shane, 2003; Shane, Locke, & Collins, 2003; Eckhardt & Shane, 2003; Shane & Venkataraman, 2000; Venkataraman, 1997). While the relevance of environmental factors, opportunities and non-psychological characteristics of the individual for business creation is widely accepted, academic scholars have not yet reached consensus on the degree to which personality traits and entrepreneurial behavior are interrelated. Although this relationship has been studied for many decades, the classical trait approach is still controversially discussed. This is indeed surprising since classical researchers, such as Knight (1921) and Schumpeter (1934) already considered the psychological characteristics of entrepreneurs as central to the explanation of entrepreneurship and many scholars have contributed to this field of research in the past fifty years (Cromie, 2000). Against this background, this thesis contributes to literature by investigating the relationship between personality traits and entrepreneurship. We focus on personality traits that match the tasks of entrepreneurs, i.e. competitiveness, risk taking, innovativeness, autonomy, proactiveness, general self-efficacy, internal locus of control, and general optimism. We introduce this...
