These sixteen volumes contain a great number of important cases which are reported nowhere else, and very many others of which a fuller and more accurate report is given than will be found elsewhere. The present work is an endeavour - it is hoped not an unsuccessful one - to facilitate reference to the rulings reported in these sixteen volumes by bringing together under general headings the by no means inconsiderable body of law which those rulings contain. It was intended, also to be useful to the legal profession, as a work in which, under the general headings, the important rulings of the other High Courts might be noted, where they could then be found without the trouble which is often expended in searching for them. I should have been glad if I could have added to the utility of the present work by myself noting up and including in it the rulings of the High Courts of Madras, Bombay, and the North-Western Provinces; for it is undoubted that a good digest of the rulings of all the...
