Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Physical Training for Special Classes of the Elementary Schools Physical training may be regarded as even more important for pupils of the special classes than for the children of the regular grades. It not only is essential for the correction or amelioration of physical defects and in establishing the proper physical basis for mental growth; but it also furnishes one of the best channels through which the mind of the subnormal child may be reached and its intellectual, affective and volitional processes stimulated and developed. The problems, however, presented by the children of the special classes are so different from those encountered in regular grade work, that the ordinary methods of procedure must be greatly modified to meet the special class conditions. The several kinds of special classes require more or less different kinds of work, and the different pupils (graded not in accordance with conventional school standards but classified on the basis of mentality as of Group A, institutional type; Group B, inherently backward; or Group C, somewhat higher capacity) must have the work varied to suit their individual abilities and needs. The teacher is in need of specific help in this field. The attempt, therefore, has been made to explain how the exercises of the manual for regular grades one, two and three may be modified for use in special classes. The more formal exercises should be supplemented, indeed, in some cases they should be supplanted, by games, plays and other exercises which combine physical training with mental recreation and stimulation. Accordingly a considerable number of such exercises have been collated and included in this pamphlet together with detailed suggestions for their adaptation...
