Excerpt: .himself to be about midway between the two shores. The height and length of the seas aided this impression; and it must be added that Cap by this time began to feel a respect for fresh water which twenty-four hours earlier he would have derided as impossible. Just as the nigh. turned, the fury of the wind became so great that he four d it impossible to bear up against it, the water falling on the deck of the little craft in such masses as to cause it to poake to the centre, and, though a vessel of singularly liv.V qualities, to threaten to bury it beneath its weight. Thh people of the Scud averred that never before had they beev out in such a tempest, which was true; for, possessing a perfect knowledge of all the rivers and headlands and nans, Jasper would have carried the cutter in shore long er-. this, and placed her in safety in some secure anchorage. But Cap still disdained to consult the young master, who below, determining to act like a mariner of the broad ocean. It was one in the morning when the storm-staysail was again got on the Scud, the head of the mainsail lowered, and the cutter put before the wind. Although the canvas now exposed was merely a rag in surface, the little craft nobly justified the use of the name she bore. For eight hours did she scud in truth; and it...
