By Eliza Nelson Blair

Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Lisbeth Wilson: A Daughter of New Hampshire Hills UP in northern New Hampshire, on a delightful April morning of the sweet old days, a rosy child, with spring time buoyancy in every motion, climbed over the stone steps of a wall close by a pair of bars, sprang with-a hop, skip, and jump across a road, by a garden, to the front door of a house, turned, and watched a flock of sheep which she had just fed with corn and beans. One red-mittened hand held a wooden measure carelessly by its brim. She was Dorothy Wilson, seven years old, daughter to Thomas Wilson and his wife Martha, who owned the dwelling and farm around it. Curling locks of brown hair showed under a quilted red hood. Her long, full cloak of black-and-white checkedannel was gathered into a yoke around the shoulders. It blew back, disclosing a wine-coloredannel gown and blue linen tier. Pantalets like the dress touched the instep of her high leather bootees. The unpainted house behind her was built at a fork of roads, well...
