Excerpt from The Cost of Producing Minnesota Dairy Products, 1904-1909 Investigations of proper methods of feeding and of compounding rations have placed the feeding of dairy cows on a basis which is particularly exact. Scientific invention has given the world methods by which the daily productivity of a cow may be accurately determined and her value as a producer learned at any time. The care and shelter required for a cow used for dairy purposes has become a subject of popular interest, and every farmer and cow owner knows at least the advantage of the care which should be given an animal used in dairy production. In fact, because of the important position the cow holds in the economy of the farm, a propaganda has for years been conducted in favor of better and more advanced methods of care and feeding; as a result dairying is more nearly upon a factory basis than any other enterprise of the farm.
