During the daylight hours, the females seek suitable situations for starting burrows, while the males seek the burrows of females not yet appropriated by males. Flight and movements over the tree cease when nightfall is well settled, though flight seems to be most active just at the twilight hour. Migrational activity apparently commences about the middle of the afternoon. The burrows of this insect are characteristic and readily distinguishable from those of Eccoptogaster rugulosus and other common shot-hole or pin-hole beetles. The entrance to the burrow is partially closed by a gummy exudate, mixed with bits of bark-dust and frass, the mass being bound together with a fine silken thread which is manufactured by both sexes. This mass, partially covering and extending somewhat into the burrow, is not found at the entrance to the burrows of E. rugulosus. The female commences burrowing into the bark, nearly always entering at a lenticel, and if the sap in the tree proves scanty, she constructs the brood chamber just between the sapwood and the bark; if, however, the sap is abundant, the galleries are confined to the bark, though sometimes impinging on the sapwood. The main chamber of the burrow may be anywhere from 1 inch to 2.625 inches long, the average length being about 2.06 inches. The diameter of the main burrow varies between 1-8 inch or less to 3-.16 of an inch or thereabouts....
