Brand New Book  Print on Demand .From the author of Blackbeard Reconsidered! James Wimble was best known for his map of the Lower Cape Fear Region in 1733, and especially for his final map of 1738. Wimble saved the fledgling port town of Wilmington, North Carolina from certain ruin. As Alan D. Watson, in Wilmington, North Carolina, to 1861 put it, Wimble no doubt was the prime instigator of the new town. Londoners would remember him for his exploits as a privateer in the War of Jenkins Ear, in the 1740 s. Many of the British local rags describe him as taking prizes of great burthen and rich cargo. These exciting times for English readers proved less than exuberant for Wimble, however. What we know of him during that time mostly comes from British records. His wife died, he lost an arm to chain shot in 1742, and later, almost his life while chasing down a Spanish ship through the Florida Keys in a ship that he named Revenge. In his final days, James Wimble went back to London to engage in the timber trade.
