The controversial great flood of the bible and Noahs Ark are not mythical. There was a real flood large enough to be called a worldwide flood, and a real vessel. The Ark existed, not exactly as described in Genesis, but as changed by Ptolemy I of Egypt who ordered the first translation of the Bible. The design of the ark is based upon the Star of David. This geometrical form was not developed as a symbol, but was used as a practical design of the arks keel and later for the invention of the Greek alphabet. It was also used in the layout of Stonehenge about 2600 BC. The story of the Biblical flood begins with the rising of the water level of the Atlantic Ocean, about 29000 years ago when the narrow isthmus connecting South America to Antarctica failed creating the Drake Passage. This most significant world event ended the last Ice Age and precluded forever their return. It caused the mass extinctions. Global warming, still happening, resulted in the melting of the ice cap and raising sea level, setting up the Biblical flood and today, the resounding controversy over its cause. It left us a legacy of an earthquake and volcano prone Pacific basin. Considerable blame for the failure of science to recognize the correct timing of the opening of the Drake Passage falls directly on the false theory of Continental Drift and Tectonic Plates. These theories were never scientifically proven, but were eventually adopted by mainstream geologists by consensus agreement. Proving the contrary position that the earths crust is not in separate, moving pieces was impossible until recently with the introduction of satellite GPS measurement showing conclusively...
