Excerpt: . chapter xviii Clear as Crystal T tello, people! What s the matter, Zizi? I I I ll be on your side! Bank on me, little one, to the last ditch. And, by jumping Jupiter, Brice, I believe the last ditch is coming my way! No, I haven t got a strangle-hold on that eloping memory of mine yet, but I ave opes. I ve had a glimmer of a gleam of a ray of light on my dark, mysterious past, and I beflew myself straight to good little old Doctor Rankin, who s my Trouble Man every time. And he says that it s the beginning of the end. That any day, almost any hour now, I may burst forth a full-remembered and properly christened citizen. Good for you, old chap, and thrilled at the elation in his tones, I held out my hand. Go in and win! Oh, won t it be fine when you remember? cried Mrs. Vail, wringing her hands in excitement; why, I knew a man once Yes, Rivers encouraged her, in his kindly way, what happened to the lucky chap? Why, he was affected something as you are, --or, as you were but Wise couldn t stand for what seemed likely to be a long story. Excuse me, Mrs. Vail, he interrupted her, but, really, I must run away now, and I want a word or two with Mr. Rivers first. The good lady subsided, but it was...
