Excerpt from The Puss Caterpillar and the Effects of Its Sting on Man It is believed that there are five or six instars, but owing to high mortality and over lapping the later stages have not been definitely separated. In the last stages the larvae are well covered-with hair, which lies rather ?at, extending downward to the surface upon which the insect rests. The larvae are considerably deeper in the thoracic region and taper toward the posterior end, the hair at that end being tufted to form a sort of tail. (see Fig. The hairs all arise from rather definite circlets, three rows of which are present on each side, the dorso-lateral ones being the largest. Among the hairs on each of these convex areas are numerous smooth yellowish spines with almost black tips. (see Fig. The dorso-lateral rows contain from 100 to 125 each, the lateral from 50 to 60, and the ventro-lateral rows 20 to 30 each. Close to the base of the legs and the pseudopods is a row of small folds bearing some hair on their apices.
