Shroff Publishers/Packt, 2008. Softcover. Condition: New. Learn how to model business processes in an SOA-compliant approach using BPMN, translate them into BPEL and execute them on the SOA platform. A practical guide with real-world examples illustrating all key concepts. Modeling business processes for SOA and developing end-to-end IT support has become one of the top IT priorities. The SOA approach is based on services and on processes. Processes are focused on composition of services and in that sense services become process activities. Experience has shown that the implementation and optimization of processes are the most important factors in the success of SOA projects. SOA is so valuable to businesses because it enables process optimization. In order to optimize processes, we need to know which processes are relevant and we have to understand them something that cannot be done without business process modeling. There is a major problem with this approach a semantic gap between the process model and the applications. This book will show you how to fill this gap. It describes a pragmatic approach to business process modeling using the Business Process Modeling Notation (BPMN) and the automatic mapping of BPMN to the Business Process Execution Language (BPEL), which is the de-facto standard for executing business processes in SOA. The book will also cover related technologies like Business Rules Management and Business Activity Monitoring which play a pivotal role in achieving closed loop Business Process Management. What you will learn from this book Modeling business processes in an SOA-compliant way A detailed understanding of BPMN standard for business process modeling and analysis Automatically translating BPMN into BPEL Executing business processes on SOA platforms Overcome the semantic gap between process models and their execution, and follow the closed-loop business process management life cycle Understand technologies complementary to BPM and SOA...
