Excerpt: . . . fair was to be held on the small green outside Mr. Montagues lodge gates. It was not a very grand fair as a rule, but this time it was said there were to be several shows, and a beautiful merry-go-round, and a Flying Polly, as they called the large boat swings, that would go up higher than the cottages near. Sam had made up his mind that he would have some fun the evening of the fair, and he had put by a shilling of the money he got by hollerin, to spend, and he felt quite grand at the thought of having so much money. Two days before the fair, Mr. Montague called him into his study as he was passing the window, and told him that he had heard of the lady who had lost the brooch, and that she had promised to drive down from London that very day and fetch it. I think, Sam, you are hardly fit to meet a lady and give her the brooch, so we must see what we can do for you, Sam followed Mr. Montague into a room where there was a tap and a basin for water, a towel and a piece of soap, and on a chair near lay a nice tidy suit of clothes. Now, Sam, said Mr. Montague, laughing as he saw the boys look of astonishment and delight, let me see how clean and nice you can make yourself look....
