Army War College, 2006 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)77484977 Subject: Alliances. Excerpt: . . . With regard to the specific role of alliances in the arsenal of American power, skepticism was growing in Republican circles about whether they should and or could continue to play a central role in U. S. foreign policy. Underlying this doubt were emerging questions about whether there would be a sufficient overlap of fundamental interests to sustain alliance commitments and whether future international circumstances would be predictable enough to permit joint threat assessment 10 and agreement on priorities and action. Furthermore, other kinds of less formal arrangements, such as coalitions of the willing, were gaining in appeal. Such groupings had been promoted during the Clinton administration by the Supreme Allied Commander for Europe General John Shalikashvili, who sought to establish a modality that would allow a self-selecting group of North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) allies to engage in collective military action using Alliance assets but without 11 implicating all members. The intent was to supplement rather than supplant the Alliance framework. Richard Haass subsequently put forth the related concept of foreign policy by posse, which offered the flexibility of selected nation states coalescing for narrow tasks or purposes. However, he also noted that, the informal coalition approach is not without significant drawbacks. By definition, such groups do not exist before the problem or crisis emerges. They therefore offer no deterrent - although, if formed quickly enough, they can still provide a preventive function. Informal coalitions take time to forge. . . The lack of common equipment, military doctrine, and common experience is likely to 12 limit effectiveness. So, too, will a lack...
