Josephus tells us that many rich Jews had remained in Babylon when Zerubbabel left it with his 50, 000, and no doubt their descendants were found there by St. Peter when he sought out there the sheep and lambs he was to feed. (See 1 Pet. v. 13, and John, xxi. 15-18.) Other exiles had removed to Susa with Mordecai and Esther, and, though three generations had passed away, they wept, like their forefathers, when they remembered Zion. Among them was Nehemiah, a young cupbearer to Artaxerxes the king, whose sad countenance attracted the attention of his master. In consequence he obtained permission to return to Jerusalem, and to rebuild the ruined walls; and these seven chapters record his mission, which was successfully accomplished in spite of many hindrances, Samaritans, Ammonites, and Arabs, all combining against the feeble Jews. Finding Zerubbabels...
