Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: . storage of poultry and eggs, the application of the scientific work done has removed the question of fruit storage from the field of contention. 2. The great bulk of the poultry stored is sold in from nine to twelve months after storage; that is, before the next producing season. Ordinary grades of fowl are probably on the market between the sixth and ninth month of storage. Special seasonal products, such ns the small broiler or the softmeated roaster will probably be kept until these birds can be produced again, which means a twelve months time or close to it. It is the object of every egg storer to unload his storage holdings Just as promptly as possible when the egg shortage begins. If he can get his stock off in eight months he is pretty sure to do it. A nine months holding is apt to be a risky proposition: and anything beyond that Is almost certain to be a loss. I do not think that meat is ordinarily kept more than one year, except In large meat centers, such as Chicago or Kansas City, where I am told it is some times held over twelve months. My own observations in the East would lead me to believe that most of our meat is out of the warehouses between six and nine months. S. Kept. 1272, 61-3 12 Seasonal fish are kept until the next season of production--very seldom longer. For good keeping, a fish...
