"This book provides perspectives on interlinkages between fertility, mortality, contraception, reproductive health, and socio-economic and cultural factors in slum population groups in Delhi. Multivariate analysis of survey based data from five selected slums of Delhi reveals strong interconnections amongst crucial demographic parameters namely marriage-age, fertility, contraception, fetal-wastage, and infant and child mortality. Thereby the study reveals linkages between the demographic parameters and critical components of reproductive and child health (RCH) care viz. antenatal and delivery care utilization, children's immunization and women's reproductive tract infections. Furthermore, the study reveals that the demographic and the RCH components get influenced not only by socio-economic parameters like female employment and education, husbands' Occupational...
