By God's blessing, contribute to recall to men's minds a forgotten class of duties. Its author was unwilling to consent to its publication, fearing lest the greatness of the subject should be rather disguised by what (from the nature of the case) could present some of its features only; and that, in outline. A friend, however, happened to know of one case in which God had by it led an individual to make some what of a venture for Christ's sake, and that, in ignorance. Whether the sacrifice involved might not prove very considerable. He therefore urged the publication of the Sermon It Opens a source of high endeavours and striving after perfection, which has of late been left too much out of sight. It contains many hints, which a thoughtful mind may follow out, if it but desire to have the mind of the true disciple of Christ, which would forsake all and follow Him. It is not hereby suggested, that all should at once...
