Paperback. Condition: New. B. K Barrett (illustrator). 348 pages. I made my way to the front doors of the bus for a quick exit. Time was distance, distance was life. Two steps from the door, I broke my own rule and looked back catching her eye. Spies never look back. . . A dark hooded figure blends into the shadows as just another passenger on the city bus. Tobias Reese may be an artful killer or international spy, but he appears to be just another disturbed teenager, homeless man or social misfit hitching a ride to nowhere. He knows governments of the world are trying to silence him, mega-corporations trying to hunt him down. He holds the secret to the safety and security of mankind in his hands. A secret too valuable to keep, a secret too deadly to tell. Will he and the world as he knows it survive the bus ride. . . He thinks not. Prologue: I parted ways with my friend and changed identities in Jakarta, before flying through Mumbai, where I again shifted identities before heading to Dubai. I recovered the all important package, and some personal gear I might have needed for this mission, before disappearing off the radar. I hitched a ride, as a medical officer, on an oil tanker bound for San Diego. My hope was that time and distance would give me an advantage when I reappeared closer to my home nation. The long voyage had given me ample time to meditate and mourn the loss of a woman who had meant the world to me. It had also been likely that someone would catch up with Richard and make him disappear into the heroic casualty list of the CIA. I trusted that he had enough technology to create his own...
