The Blessing is a fast paced fiction novel filled with suspense and intrigue from beginning to end. Prologue Emily Jeffs dinner was late. I wasnt trying to deny that. Im a good wife. Jeff has told me a thousand times, Your job is to take care of me and my boys and nothing else. I tried my best, but sometimes I cant make my body go any further. The logs attached to my feet just refused to move. I had no choice but to surrender to my defeated body. I cant remember the last time I sat in a chair for an hour without being yelled at or called a stupid this or stupid that. I had every intention of getting up from that chair. The clock on the wall was warning me. It was ticking away as I watched and prayed that my eyes were deceiving me. It was 3: 00 pm when I woke up. I was already way off my schedule. I wished my body would get the news. Jeff says Im too stupid to work around the house without a schedule. I would not know what to do if he did not plan every minute of my day. I proved him right when I messed up a week ago and forgot some of my chores. He did not include breaks on this weeks schedule. I really had no business sitting down. I probably would not have if the chair had not kept calling me. I guess I am stupid. I can not think of any other reason why I stay here. I know the speech Ill get, and I am all too familiar with the routine....
