The toxins which developed after transplantation were comparable to a spectrum at one end of which were the homoio toxins and at the other an absence of toxins after autotransplantation, the various lengths of syng encsiotoxins forming the center. The behavior of lymphocytes, fibroblasts, and vessels toward the syng encsiotoxins represented a reaction on the part of different tissues to the same kind of chemical agency. However, the reaction of the fibroblasts and vessels occurred only when the syng encsiotoxins were produced in such a quantity that the effect became apparent within the first twelve days after transplantation, while the reaction of the lymphocytes sometimes became marked at a late date in cases in which at an early period after transplantation the syng encsiotoxins were not yet sufficiently strong to call forth the fibroblast and vascular reaction. With certain exceptions which were indicated in this...
