Excerpt: .has been employed by me for the pains of locomotor ataxia, where it exerts a most favorable action very promptly. A feature which is noticeable is, that its action is prompt, rarely more than twenty minutes being consumed before its effects are appreciable. I might continue to outline clinical reports of the use of this drug, but that would 11012 further carry out my purpose. My object in writing this paper is to call attention to the fact that the use of opium is almost needless, and that inasmuch as we have an agent which gives us the desired results, we would not consult the best interests of our patients in giving opium preparations with that old time freedom which produced so many bad results. I believe this feeling is growing in the ranks of the profession. Its field is becoming more and more...
