Not illustrated. 1864 Excerpt: . . . and Bath, and to those who may have obtained them by a Royal Grant. There are, however, a few ancient and unennobled families who are entitled to the use of Supporters by ancestral right, which is esteemed to be far more honorable than any modern grant of Supporters. Among these families may be named the Tichbornes of Tichborne, co. Hants. Their Supporters are Two lions guardant gules, armed and languid azure. No other family can trace back their Supporters to so early a date as the Tichbornes, vizJ, to the early part of the 14th century. Richard II. was the first English King who used Supporters. His Supporters were two angels. Edward IV. was the first who employed a lion, which he assumed owing to its being one of the Supporters of the Earldom of March, possessed by that king. King James I. introduced the unicorn, until whose reign the royal Supporters were ever varying. The Motto, or art de guerre, is generally placed underneath the Shield, inscribed upon a scroll or riband. Mottoes are not necessarily hereditary, like the Arms, Crests, and Supporters. totons anli fcmuts. The armorial Shields of Sovereigns are surmounted by a Crown, and those of the Princes of the Blood-Royal by Royal Coronets varying in such a manner as at once to betoken the rank of the bearer. The Peers of the Realm, as well as the Relicts of deceased Peers, and those who are Peeresses in their own right, have...
