Excerpt from The Present Crisis, or the Currency: A Tract of the Times for Every Man Who Can Read But how did it happen that the business world awoke to to the conviction that the currency could no longer be, trusted as a measure of value just when they did? What was it that destroyed their confidence, and prostrated, as in a moment, all the credit of the Banks? Here it is to be observed that if no answer could be given to this question, it would not invalidate, or weaken, one link in the preceding chain of argument. But we shall the better understand it if we remember that, for twenty years now, since the reconstruction of the Bank system after 1837 -the currency of the country has been, with short and slight tractions, constantly and rapidly expanding. Every new Bank that has gone into Operation has thrown an additional quantity into the circulating medium; until the number of Banks, and the amount of their issues, have become enormous. This has begotten and nourished that mad spirit of extravagance, over-trading, speculation, and stock gambling, which has so grievously corrupted the business and social life of the people. This bloating of the currency had depreciated its value, and enhanced prices until they had reached a point where they were actually unwieldy. And this depreciation, affecting equally, of course, the value of the precious metals, has driven them out of the country, and left the Banks with enormous issues of paper, and comparatively little specie with which to redeem their bills, in case of demand. Naturally, at last, Observing this from their published exhibits, and from any other incidental...
