Since the appearance of Culmann's work, which marked an epoch in the history of graphical statics, the graphical method has attained pretty general dissemination in engineering circles; its advantages over the analytical have been recognized more and more, and its further development kept constantly in view. It is universally applied in the designing of stationary structures, - such as bridges, - for determining the requirements of the individual parts. In machine design, also, the graphical method gives valuable aid in finding the moments to which the machine parts are subjected, and in determining dimensions. Accordingly courses in graphical statics have been introduced in all technical schools. The graphical method has also been adapted with advantage to certain departments of dynamics, as in Radinger's Dampfmachines mit hoher Kolbengeschwindigkeit, and Proll's Versuch einer graphischen Dynamik. * In all these determinations, however, friction and the special harmful resistances to motion have not been taken into account. Heretofore all attempts to ascertain these harmful resistances in machines, and to determine the efficiency which is dependent upon...
