PURPOSES OF INSTRUCTION Sibley College is organized, primarily, to teach the fundamental principles, theoretical and practical, that underlie the various branches of mechanical and electrical engineering. In addition to this there is included such work in pure and applied economics as is needed by the engineer of the present time. In the senior year students may take any one of the following options: A. Electrical Engineering. B. Heat-Power Engineering. Steam Engineering or Internal Combustion Engineering. C. Structural and Plant Engineering. D. Ship Design and Construction. E. Industrial Engineering. Since the work in any one of these options includes only a portion of the time of one academic year out of four, it follows that specialization cannot be carried very far; in fact the faculty of Sibley College holds the opinion that the duty of a technical school to its undergraduates is to train them thoroughly...
