Excerpt from The California Five-Spined Engraver: Its Biology and Control Salvage logging is Often used to control infestations in trees that can be readily reached from roads. In some. Areas special portable equipment is used to facilitate rapid handling and loading of infested logs onto trucks. These logs are hauled away to the sawmill where they are sawn into lumber. In the milling process the slabs containing infested bark are destroyed in the burner. The effectiveness of this control method depends On prompt detection of infestations and on salvage before the insects reach maturity and emerge.
