Excerpt from The Development and Uses of the Audion: Thesis A general statement is given as an introduction The fundamental principle in the construction of audion is manifested by the electron theory. An historical review is made over the earliest experiments on the emitted gases surrounding the incandescent filament. J. A. Fleming discovered that the gas emitted by the filament is a carrier of negative electricitv. J. J. Thomson investigated and proved that the negative carrier of electricity is in the form.of a free electron. Richardson established a law in terms of a formula to govern the intensity of the electron current;that is the latter is proportional to the temperature of the filament. J. A. Fleming made the practical application of a vacuum tube, containing an incandescent filament and an anode plate, in detecting an electromagnetic wave. Definition of an audion. Lee De Forest conducted a series of experiments leading to the later practical a plication of the audion in radio- a telephony. Irving Langmuir founded a second law to govern the intensity of the electron current. This law states that the intensity of the electron current is not only limited by the temperature of the filament but also by the space between the filament and the anode plate in the audion.
