Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Report on Drainage Investigations, 1903 The best practical methods of applying the necessary quantity of water to soils which are deficient in moisture, and of draining them when the supply of water from any source becomes too great, are of vital interest to every cultivator. The object of the drainage work which the Office of Experiment Stations has undertaken in connection with its irrigation investigation is to study these methods and their efficiency under various conditions, to examine lands needing drainage, and to give advice as to their reclamation. Such aid has been given where the work involved was fairly representative of a general class of conditions affecting the reclamation and development of land. What has been done along this line during the past year is herein outlined, with the deductions and results briefly discussed. Actual field and local conditions have been dealt with direct. Business, engineering, and practical phases of various problems have been considered and will continue to receive marked attention in future investigations.
