Excerpt from The Open Court, Vol. 39: A Monthly Magazine, Devoted to the Science of Religion, the Religion of Science, and Extension of the Religious Parliament Idea; May, 1925 Higher Education, formulated in its recent report. According to this report, based on a comprehensive investigation, modern language study in the British Empire should be no longer limited to the different national literatures as such, isolated, as it were, in a cultural vacuum, but be extended to include the main factors of the cultural environments in which those literatures developed, as the arts, the art-craft, architecture, philosophy, history, social conditions. This transition from a traditional, narrowly formal and verbal view to the view Of language as the final storehouse of the entire history of a race foreshadows the coming general introduction into educational practice, Of Herder s conception of the universal function of language in the genetic unity of all civilization. Books are the treasury not Only of words, but Of the deepest experiences, the best knowledge, the highest faiths and ideals Of each people; they are the most complete witnesses to the civilization, the living voice Of the spirit, of each race. Out of this conviction, or rather, out of the deepening and widening of the significance Of this conviction, has arisen the new aim Of modern language study. There were at the Modern Language Meeting more than a thousand representatives Of higher education from the East and the Middle West, and some from the Pacific Coast. One of the principal subjects of conversation was the relation of Germanistics to American culture. Among the leading university teachers the conviction is again finding open...
