When Dr. Gentry delivers Julia Gordons baby girl, severe developmental abnormalities are discovered. A pediatric team, quickly assigned to determine the infants condition, is led by Dr. Janet Stowe. Dr. Stowe is a well respected pediatrician, and also the wife of the obstetrician who delivered the critically ill newborn - Steven Gentry. Dr. Stowe is puzzled that her husband did not discover the infants easily detected abnormalities; although rare, ultrasounds should have exposed severe developmental problems. The Gordons child, with no chance of survival, dies only four hours later. Early in their marriage, Janet and Steven, knowing their professional paths would cross, had agreed not to question one anothers medical decisions. Janet kept the agreement they had made; but found it difficult as she could not forget the look in Julia and Robert Gordons eyes when they first observed their infants deformities. Six weeks later, Steven arrives home and finds that his wife is missing; her lifeless body is discovered in the woods behind their home the following day. Dr. Gentry, frantic, contacts a good friend, saying its important that they speak; but when she arrives, Steven is dead - found hanging in his garage. Julia and Robert Gordon, trying to understand and deal with their daughters fatal abnormalities, are referred to a Genetics Counselor. While reviewing the Gordons file, Priscilla Kirkpatrick makes a startling discovery - a discovery that puts her life in danger. Is the murder of Stevens wife and his suicide connected to Kirkpatricks discovery Tension elevates throughout the entire area as detectives and the FBI learn of the information Kirkpatrick has uncovered. Whose Baby is This is an easy read, with a surprise ending. This item...
